Introduction

Extinction Rebellion (XR) was launched at the end of October 2018 with the aim of sparking an international movement that would challenge governments to tell the truth about the unfolding ecological crisis and potential societal breakdown, and to act as if that truth was real. Since then, thousands of people have committed to using the tool of mass non-violent civil disobedience and joined XR’s rapidly growing network with (at the time of writing) 206 groups spanning 26 countries.

To fulfill its potential, XR needs to connect with everyone. Creating a broad but agile movement requires planning and resources, and a depth of understanding of how to work collaboratively, and sometimes in solidarity. XR also needs to be action-based, operate transparently, be rooted in our many different communities, and be decentralised. If life on earth is to have a chance, we must all be able to coordinate to ensure we can seize political opportunities to dismantle the current toxic system.

This strategy sets out how XR will catalyse the next phase of the rebellion in 2019, focusing mainly on the UK. It describes actions, demands, trainings and processes that will take place in the UK until April 2019, recognizing more work is needed to map out scenarios for a wide range of different realities. The unstable political conditions in the UK mean XR must constantly evaluate the merits of different pathways needed to bring about lasting systemic change. XR’s International Solidarity Team are proactively finding ways for XR to support activists in developing countries and for XR’s work to be truly international by April 2019.

XR wants to thank all individuals, inside and outside XR, who provided feedback to the XR Strategy Group and the people who pulled this together to produce this strategy.

Overview and Political Landscape

XR was launched at the end of October 2018 with the aim of sparking an international movement that would challenge governments around the world through the tools of peaceful civil disobedience. XR’s core demands are set out below (see Box 2). These focus on telling the truth and setting up citizens’ led democratic processes to oversee the transitions needed to achieve XR’s purpose – to protect all life on Earth.

We are delighted with the progress made and the hundreds of thousands of people who have become part of our network. In less than four months, XR actions and social media have engaged up to a million people in 65 countries with XR groups now established in more than 26 countries.

XR’s International Solidarity Team are reaching out to activists in developing countries to find ways to support their work recognizing they have been at the frontlines, fighting both colonialism, rising inequalities and ecological destruction and often facing brutality and violence from state and private militias.

A table summarizing just a few of the XR national actions to date in the UK is set out in Box 1 below. These actions generated huge, mainly favourable, interest from mainstream global media about XR’s demands. Box 1 does not include actions from groups around the world. Nor does it include the hundreds of grassroots actions being taken up by the 91 XR groups in the UK to develop a strong decentralised movement.

For example, XR groups have been working with the Mayor of London and with allies from across the political spectrum to pass 16 Council motions recognizing the climate and ecological emergency we are now facing. This strand of XR’s work will accelerate in 2019 as we target Mayors from larger cities with an aim of getting 1/3 of the UK population to recognise the climate and ecological emergency implications of business as usual. These motions are just the first step in citizens and local officials recognizing the need for deep adaptation and to start the process of building resilient communities committed to zero emissions.

These developments – the spread of XR internationally and deepening of activist engagement at the local level – support XR’s plans for the next phase of the rebellion starting on 15th April 2019. The idea is to bring XR’s demand to the streets of London as a way of forcing radical step change in the UK and to use mass civil disobedience to insist on opening up a national dialogue on the need for fundamental political change.
The UK has been chosen because 91 of the 206 XR groups are based here and because the UK is at an unprecedented moment in its political history. There is widespread agreement that our current political system cannot admit, let alone tackle, the planetary emergency and potential societal breakdown we now face.

Nature cannot wait. Humanity and all life on Earth are at stake. That is a central truth which electoral cycles have failed to grasp for the last 30 years. People have always risen up to dismantle dysfunctional political systems. XR believes there is an urgent need for a collective push to reinvent our democratic systems to deal with systemic crises, like climate change.

In the UK, there is a risk that fascist and alt-right groups might use Brexit to push for a “national emergency” because they want to weaken democracy further and push for a police state with greater military powers to serve global elites. XR will work in deep collaboration with other peaceful, social justice movements to resist this and to ensure we move to more democratic, accountable systems aligned with protecting all life on Earth.

A large part of XR’s work in 2019 will focus on getting people to understand and test out the use of Citizens’ Assemblies as a tool to drive radical change. XR believe Citizens’ Assemblies can deliver scalable, legitimate solutions to the ecological, political, social crises that are causing rising fear, hate and separation in the world. Citizens’ Assemblies are formal bodies made up of ordinary people selected by lottery to provide a representative sample of the population. With the help of impartial facilitators, the participants of a Citizens’ Assembly discuss information and have access to experts about a key issue and then come to a conclusion about what should be done. There is evidence to show that citizens assemblies, with access to experts and truth, make complex and brave decisions that politicians often cannot make for fear of losing votes.

To showcase how Citizens’ Assemblies work, XR will try to mobilise resources to launch a Citizens’ Assembly to discuss the implications of the climate and ecological crisis as early as possible in 2019. We hope the process of setting up a UK based Citizens’ Assembly will inspire others around the world to challenge and change their political systems.

We recognise that, partly because of its military and colonial past, the UK has a disproportionate share of soft and hard power in the world. XR believes that citizens assemblies can help show how to reinvent the Mother of Parliaments by showing how ordinary people can redesign destructive policies and political systems. Over time, this will help to create the conditions of systemic change and to empower individuals and as well movements of resistance worldwide. We will work closely with international allies and activists to make April 15th an international day of rebellion.

Purpose

Our simplest purpose at XR is to grow the capacity to face the reality of our ecological and social crisis with love as our principle, guided by reason and conscience. At the level of politics Extinction Rebellion is the simple expression of our desire for a genuine democracy - based on informed consent - that is capable of solving the multiple crises facing humanity.

In the face of emergency, the purpose of Extinction Rebellion is to do what is necessary for planetary integrity (within nature’s boundaries) and to embody courageous action for bringing about a peaceful transformation of human society based on love, justice and decentralisation.

In XR’s Declaration of Rebellion which launched XR as a movement in October 2018, we say – “It becomes our sacred duty to rebel…We call upon every principled and peaceful citizen to rise with us.”

We are committed to using mass, non-violent civil disobedience, constructive disruption, planned and random acts of courage and rebellion so that we may discover our interconnectedness and our longing for a collective response.

XR seeks to facilitate a space for an exponential growth in our collective imagination and courage. This requires a new kind of politics that compassionately embraces everyone and every part of us.

XR is committed to developing a regenerative culture internally and in all our collaborations, partnerships, communities and relationships. Acting with integrity with each other is not separate from our integrity to act with respect for nature’s boundaries.

As a movement, we listen for the ways in which we can gather a network around a shared purpose and build deep collaboration for reclaiming our sense of being in harmony with Earth and with each other. We understand that we are being triggered by our survival instinct. We acknowledge our fear, denial, despair, grief and rage.

We assert that some of our systems have become warped, devoid of wholeness, malfunctioning and harmful for planetary integrity. We strive to re-conceive systems and transform the engines of destruction so that all life may flourish. We ask society to recognise the emergency and develop decentralised life supporting systems.

Some of our success will be in the intangible, or even in a ‘glorious failure’. Our purpose is rooted in an intuition that something at the furthest reaches of our imaginings needs to be ushered in if our species is to survive. We remain curious about what’s possible when we become upstanders and we have faith in the power of imagination.

XR exists in a spirit of thinking and speaking the truth while knowing we only ever hold a partial aspect of the truth. In our humility, we are able to consider being wrong. We hold our own failures and the failures of each other with compassion and ask for responsibility. XR notices that there is joy and freedom in honesty. Truth propels us to the edge of our courage and as noted by Millicent Fawcett “Courage calls to courage everywhere.”

Our purpose is to facilitate a shift in human consciousness, a transformation towards interdependence and to notice how and where our systems lack the best of modern intelligence and ancient wisdom.

Where we want to directly address the extinction crisis in order to reduce its ferocity, our purpose is also to focus on issues of deep adaptation. We seek to mitigate and prepare for near-term collapse. We encourage systems that are wholistic, dynamic, responsive, emergent and vital for an agenda of adaptation.

Martin Luther King said “I am convinced love is the most durable power in the world. It is not an expression of impractical idealism, but of practical realism.” Our purpose is to envision and grow a culture of belonging and love.

Whichever parts of this you feel, within Extinction Rebellion you are welcome. We may feel all of this at times, but at other times, parts are missing: we can sometimes fall into anxiety, denial and despair, into feelings of separation and powerlessness. Our deeper purpose is to keep walking together towards the realisation of unity and harmony.

Together we are everything we need.
Demands

XR’s current demands (see Box 2) will continue to guide our actions until they are met or circumstances require their reconsideration. The emphasis in the build-up to April 2019 will be on communicating the truth of the emergency we face to both the Government and to the public and on asking people to act in accordance with that truth. This means asking people to be brave and face the need to demand change.

XR’s current demands are radical for the UK yet based on scientific truth. They have tapped into a widely shared sense of anger that the public is being misled about the scale, speed and social impact of ecological breakdown. Telling the truth is a deeply radical demand and has proved empowering.

Mainstream worldviews are all too often based upon narratives of scarcity, powerlessness, isolation and individualism. By contrast, XR’s demands call on society to respect nature and to (re)learn together. They make clear that it is the job of the government (not individuals) to overhaul the system, ending an economy based on short term gains, private profits, gross inequalities and ecological destruction.

XR demands the UK Government set up a formal UK Citizens’ Assembly to oversee the changes needed to tackle the climate and ecological crisis and to create a democracy fit for purpose. Ideally, this Assembly should bring together around around 300-1000 representatives, selected through sortition, (a random but balanced selection from the whole UK population) and have powers to initiate changes, including changes to legislation.

If the Government does not meet our demands to set up this Assembly in 2019, we will work with others to set up a model Assembly. A functioning model will result in a momentous shift in public consciousness and help people to see how and what changes are necessary in our current legal and political system.

XR’s demands are already building momentum and generating action at many levels. Non-violent civil disobedience in the UK, and internationally, is growing as a result of focusing on asking governments and the global media to tell the truth and to make changes to democracy.

Sixteen UK councils and cities have passed motions declaring a climate emergency. These motions open up public space for debate and could lead to informal “people’s assemblies” discussing what is happening, why, and what must change. These motions are a first step in getting officials and citizens to understand the need for emergency action. They also create space for “deep adaptation”
- a radical transformation of social and economic life responding in fair and just ways to those ecological tipping points and climatic changes that are already inevitable.

XR’s solidarity work will focus on supporting non-UK based activists and XR groups who want to adapt the concept of emergency motions and citizens’ assemblies to fit their own political contexts. XR’s demands may also need to be supplemented in some specific contexts.

It is important to clarify that XR has taken a strategic decision to not set out how to solve the climate and ecological crisis. This is because XR is calling for the Government and media to tell the truth about these crises, with the aim of leading to more discussion in the general public, and engaging citizens to decide for themselves which solutions they want to use as part of shift towards a truly people-led democratic system. As a new social movement, we don’t see it as our place to pick out from the many potential solutions already in the public domain. Our focus is on creating systems of decision-making, like Citizens’ Assemblies, where ordinary people learn from each other and help us all to take collective decisions.

Box 2: XR Demands for the UK

We are facing an unprecedented global emergency. The Government has failed to protect us. To survive, it’s going to take everything we’ve got.

1. The Government must tell the truth about the climate and wider ecological emergency, reverse inconsistent policies and work alongside the media to communicate with citizens and communities.
2. The Government must enact legally binding policy measures to reduce carbon emissions to net zero by 2025 and to reduce consumption levels.
3. A national Citizen’s Assembly to oversee the changes, as part of creating a democracy fit for purpose.
Extinction Rebellion Actions

There will be a build up of non-violent civil disobedience up to April 15th, with mobilisations in February, a celebratory spring gathering in March and disruptive actions up to mid April (for more details see Box 3 on last page). These would be complemented by actions organised by allies, media stunts, trainings and ongoing campaigns throughout the UK and internationally.

Through our actions we will try to outreach to new groups, create mass economic disruption, and vision the future we want to see in the world. Some actions will be aimed at one or two of these outcomes, and some at all three. Different kinds of civil disobedience will be designed to appeal to a wide range of people, especially families and youth. All these actions will be optimised to take into account regenerative cycles of rest and action.

These will culminate in a mass convergence in London involving staying out in the streets day after day, from 15th April. London has been chosen because of its political, financial and global significance. It also has a high concentration of elites, politicians and national and international media. Focusing these actions on disrupting central London will put significant pressure on the government.

Whilst the focus of this strategy is the UK, we expect supportive or similar XR led actions in some other countries. We will try to coordinate with them to optimise their impact, recognizing that non-UK based XR groups will need to define their own context-relevant actions and timings.

Non-Violent Direct Action trainings, regenerative culture trainings and trainings on how to run informal “people’s assemblies” at the local level will be undertaken in February to April so that we are ready to support an outpouring of joyous, creative and vision-holding actions immediately after the 15th April.

Some actions will focus on legal venues. As people work their way through the legal process, the courts can provide us with an opportunity to shine a spotlight on the government’s dishonesty and to tell the truth. We can show that science and evidence are on our side and that our demands are credible and necessary. Where people wish to adopt this approach, XR legal strategy team will make available information resources (from pre-action to police interview to trial) to support a defence that non violent direct action is a reasonable and proportionate response to the government’s failure to acknowledge the climate emergency and its failure to defend life. We will develop and revise the legal strategy in light of experiences across XR.
Things could go very well in April (massive turnouts at XR events running into hundreds of thousands, flourishing people's assemblies, teach-ins, street parties, cultural XR events etc). Alternatively, the numbers might not add up to mass disruption (less than 10,000). April could still be seen as a ‘glorious failure’ in shifting political consciousness and sowing the seeds of a bigger, more unified movement taking forward XR demands. Both scenarios would enable XR to focus efforts and extend actions into the second half of 2019. Change is rarely linear. Our actions will be designed with this in mind.

XR aims to trigger a mass movement with sufficient discipline and strategic wisdom not to be compromised or co-opted and to carry the demand for system change.

XR is clear that the police continue to be structurally racist, unjust and violent, particularly towards oppressed groups. We are totally opposed to such discriminatory practices. We are taking great care to design our strategy in a way that minimises the chance that the police will shut down our actions before these have reached a critical mass. In order to minimise the possibilities of police overreaction, XR will communicate with the police about what is already in the public sphere related to mass protest events, always making clear that we will be respectful and nonviolent.

This is an attempt to define a strategic and tactical approach to the police, and makes a clear separation between creating a moral judgement and a strategy for action. Our approach to the police, like other nonviolent mass movements, is based on what will enable radical change. A key objective is to enable both the young and old to participate in protests and this becomes more likely if the police do not overreact. Additionally, the more we can encourage the police to allow our protests to continue through communication the more likely we can get to a critical mass of participation in civil disobedience which is our aim. We will therefore speak to the police before and during actions to make this more likely. In the event of a major confrontation, we will ask the police to put the interests of the people they serve before their orders by doing a “go slow” and/or refusing to arrest peaceful demonstrators. This becomes more likely if we communicate to officers the importance of thinking through the social implications of our current crisis, and we listen to their responses.

We have learnt, both from our experience in November 2018 and a body of research in successful system change, to develop a strategy around police, security forces, and the legal system, which will guide our actions leading up to April 15th and beyond. This research suggests that non-violent movements require a shift in the loyalty of the security services, and our approach to the police and other security services intends to aid this shift, as well as respond to the present moment we are in. As a movement calling for a shift in power and systems, we understand we may be met with violence or repression, from individuals, the police, or the military or security services. It’s important to prepare, train, and plan for this possibility, not create a false sense of safety or security.
We will continue to reach out, to listen to other activists, communities and experienced individuals, for advice on this topic, and to develop a shared understanding of how to move forward together.

Community, Capacity and Resources

XR's overall strategy needs support and contributions from within and outside of XR. We aim to connect with communities made up of people from a wide variety of backgrounds and experiences in and beyond the United Kingdom, including through strengthening our international solidarity work.

The strength of any community depends on good relationships built on trust, cooperation, caring and resilience. XR recognises that discrimination and lack of awareness based on gender, ethnicity, religion, class, ability and sexual orientation operates systemically to divide us. XR's core principles and values include welcoming everyone, and creating a regenerative healthy culture together. We recognise we all have work to do to deepen our understanding of how to really have each others backs and understand the ways in which mainstream culture can unintentionally sideline some people's voices and participation. This means being responsible for our own learning about the systemic issues other people face and integrating that understanding into how XR works. We also need people to be developing their capacity to shift conflict together.

XR’s Regenerative Culture Group aims to help the movement grow into a community that is increasingly diverse and self aware. Such an XR community will support other communities to overcome the effects of living under social systems that have divided and pitted us against each other for centuries.

XR is committed to addressing the links between ecological and climate collapse, and social and economic injustices. We recognise that it is marginalised communities who are consistently on the frontlines of fossil fuel extraction, climate change, and ecological crises. When XR speaks of collapse and catastrophe we acknowledge that this is already a daily reality for many people, particularly in the Global South where the majority of the world live. We name this for what it is - an emergency. We keep this reality in mind and heart in designing our movement and our political and action strategies.

XR Outreach teams will connect with people from various communities in the UK which are at the moment underrepresented in XR UK, and will provide space for those people to create their own community or determine their own routes into the wider movement.
Concretely, this means holding meetings and events which present to various communities the scientific knowledge and related information that we have on the climate and ecological emergency -- the information that has, in general, been withheld from all communities in the UK by the government and national media. We will seek to explain how and why XR has come to this current strategy for mass rebellion and then allow space for the collective intelligence of that community to devise a response. They will decide the extent to which they integrate directly or indirectly with XR. They may choose to set up their own local groups which promote the climate and ecological emergency message within their own communities.

Through reaching out, we aim for the XR movement to be enriched by the learnings and unlearnings that come from building alliances with different communities who have long been working on anti-oppression, environmental, ecological and other social justice issues, both within the UK and internationally.

XR will continue to be a volunteer-led movement based on funding from a wider pool of in-kind and other financial donations that fit our values and do not distract us or dilute our courage to demand systemic change.

Those planning actions & logistics will work closely with those working on our regenerative culture, legal support, media, trainings, and finance, with continuous, real-time processes in place to ensure that we can:

- deliver actions within a regenerative culture;
- provide people with the skills and knowledge through trainings and expert networks to understand the risks involved in taking actions, so that they can consider legal issues, wellbeing and take measures to be as supported as possible;
- recognise we cannot know when/where and how disruptive the police will become nor when covert or overt violence will be used against us;
- continue to support arrestees and those facing legal actions;
- provide volunteer living expenses in line with active inclusion to ensure all those who would otherwise not be able to gift their time are supported; and
- sustain part of the costs of XR offices regionally and abroad, prioritising activists and marginalised communities in the Global South/Majority World.

In particular, the design and build up of actions / tactics proposed from now till April 15th and beyond, rely on XR having completed hundreds of trainings covering for example Non-Violent Direct Action (NVDA), regenerative culture and wellbeing, legal rights and dealing with the police and security, margins and mainstreams/anti-oppression; Non-Violent Communication and dealing with violence, and how to give an XR talk. We will also be running trainings on how to set up and facilitate... informal peoples’ assemblies. This will require sufficient funds to support volunteers and the material costs of mass actions. We can try our best to ensure policing remains peaceful, friendly and non-violent but there are serious risks that may be beyond our capacity to mitigate. We intend to put in place additional procedures and analysis to examine issues raised by policing.

XR is a new movement and has limited capacity. To increase our ability to create mass actions, we will aim to establish deep collaborations with progressive partners in the social justice and environment movements nationally and internationally, reaching out to explore ways in which they may want to join us on 15th April and co-create our plans for what comes beyond.

We will always try to learn how other partners are taking forward work responding to the climate and ecological crisis and listen carefully to their concerns, being mindful of resource constraints and choices. If required, XR will initiate loving, creative, culturally appropriate direct actions and stunts to draw attention to the need for allies to consider the need for urgent action. We will continue exposing cultural and media organisations and event organisers who refuse to rise to the greatest challenge of our times, the extinction of life on Earth.

Overall, our approach to developing our capacity and finding resources has worked well and we are learning continually how to improve internal processes as we reboot our organisational structures.

Our nimble and lean approach to funding has freed us from having to raise large sums of money to service salaries, offices and equipment. This means we can focus 100% on achieving transformative change.

At the same time, the huge growth in interest in XR has brought big challenges and we urgently need more resources to ensure we have enough capacity to make April as successful as possible, while avoiding burn out. Our internal processes of induction and self-organising/autonomy sometimes present an additional challenge. We want to retain these unique and attractive features and are rapidly improving through a restructure focussed on decentralisation.

These approaches are helping us develop a culture of service, humility and duty which gives us a way to both cherish and to honour all life on Earth.

Together we are everything we need.

Rebel for life!
